

PEACE TALK OVER PHONE BY ROOSEVELT AND BORAH

Idaho Senator Comes Out for Hughes and Plans Are Made for Naming Committees to Bring Harmony.

(Special From a Staff Correspondent of The Evening World.)
CHICAGO, June 7.—While George W. Perkins has been holding the Moose herd in check, conferences have been in progress that make it possible for some of the leaders of the factions to say peace is in sight. These predictions followed a talk over the phone early to-day, with Senator Borah of Idaho at this end of the line and Theodore Roosevelt at the other. There is talk of the appointment of a joint conference by the two conventions for the purpose of arranging a compromise.

Senator Borah and other Republicans who have been working hard for harmony for several days, yesterday afternoon completed their canvass of heretofore uncertain Western delegates, including those from California, Washington and Oregon. Senator Borah entered the lists as an unqualified champion of Justice Hughes, declaring that "nobody but Hughes could win against Wilson."

PEACE TALK OVER WIRE BY T. R. AND BORAH.
Senator Borah at once sought a conference with George W. Perkins. While at Perkins' rooms the Senator held a telephone conversation with Roosevelt at Oyster Bay. When he had concluded the telephone talk with Roosevelt and the conference with Mr. Perkins the Idaho Senator admitted that he "was better satisfied" with the prospects for harmony than he had been at any time since he arrived in Chicago.

Some time later Mr. Perkins emerged from a conference with Senator Henry Cabot Lodge of Massachusetts and said that the outlook for harmony between the two conventions was "brighter."

These incidents were followed by the announcement that Mr. Perkins had vetoed the Progressive plan to print full page advertisements throughout the country in behalf of Col. Roosevelt. With the statement that abandonment of the advertising campaign had been ordered came the declaration that the two conventions to-day would attempt to name conference committees "to arrange for harmonious action" between the two factions.

The plan was for the conventions to mark time while the conferences attempted to develop a plan to reduce friction to a minimum and prevent dual nominations.

TALK OF ROOSEVELT ON QUICK TRIP TO CHICAGO.

The plan, if materialized, then will be presented to the two conventions for ratification, and there were men on the ground to-day who already had visualized to their own satisfaction at least—a spectacular reunion of the "old guard" and the Progressives.

In this connection it was suggested by some that the arrival here yesterday of George B. Cortelyou—direct from Oyster Bay—was in fact the appearance of a silent advance agent, whose coming may presage that of Col. Roosevelt, who might, it was Comtesse de Perigny, an American, Reveals Brave Spirit Animating Women of Her Country, From Highest to Lowest, and Tells Why They Cheerfully Watch Their Men Go Out to Be Maimed or Killed That France May Be Preserved.

Heartening Up the Fighting Men Is Sacred Duty of Her French Sisters—Tribute to the American Ambulance Corps—Nursed Her Own Wounded Husband Back to Health at Front—Labors as Head of Nursing Staff Broke Down Health.

By Nicola Greeley-Smith.

A brilliant woman seldom acts or talks like one. Give Mary Garden or Geraldine Farrar two days to study the part and I'd back her against Mary Woolstonecraft or Charlotte Bronte to impress any man that ever lived.

So it did not astonish me yesterday to find that an American woman, educated in England, presented to me for the first time my ideal of a grande dame.

Which is, perhaps, an involved way of saying that the Comtesse de Perigny, head of the nursing staff of the French army, who has just arrived in New York, is one of the most perfect thoroughbreds I have ever met.

The Comtesse, daughter of the late Jabez A. Bostwick and of Helen C. Bostwick of 800 Fifth Avenue, broke down as the result of seventeen months' continuous service at the French front. She has come to America for a brief rest, but intends to return to France in July. I saw her yesterday at the St. Regis, and she told me with that absence of drama, which invariably characterizes the dramatic, the story of the women of France.

"I am French from the top of my head to the tip of my heels," said the Comtesse and her red hair flashed like the oriflamme of old France, which the early Perignys defended.

"I have never talked for a newspaper. If I speak it is to tell the story of the women of France. For I have heard that America believes French women are discouraged, yet to-day France is the strongest of the allies, the most removed from the thought of an inconclusive peace. If I tell what I have done it is only to make known what every French woman has done.

For to-day there is not a woman of the beau monde—of the noblesse—who is not working for France. We are all nursing or making bandages or tampons, or sheets, or shirts, or engaged in caring for indigent women and refugees."

The Comtesse was a volunteer nurse in the Boer War. She has studied medicine. She is a woman of the world. And we were half way through our interview before she mentioned, quite accidentally, that when she was presiding over the "clearing house of the wounded," back of the lines at Vitry-le-Francois, her husband, the Comte de Perigny, was brought in among the wounded.

He was badly wounded, indeed, that at first his own wife did not recognize him.

"Comte de Perigny knew he was coming to me, and I knew vaguely that he was fighting somewhere in Champagne when he was brought in, and for a moment I did not recognize him. He was badly wounded in the shoulder with shrapnel; he had two horses shot under him, and with the second horse he, too, was injured. But when he came in he was sitting up in the car. Otherwise, I think, I should have cried out or wept, but I am happy to say I have not wept since the war began."

"And when your husband was brought in, what did you do?" I asked this slender, supple creature with the soul of steel.

"Why, I put him to bed and nursed him back to health, as I had thousands of others," the Comtesse answered simply. "He was well now, except for enteritis, which all the deep wounded get, perhaps from shock and the utter demoralization of the war, which comes with a deep wound."

"The 'Rovers,' garbed in specially tailored suits, formed one of the nation's groups in line. They were the adjutants of the parade. They were Mrs. John A. Carpenter, Mrs. Charles W. Kayser, Miss Edith Wyatt, Miss Grace Abbott, Miss Agnes Forman and Mrs. James Keeley.

Chief of Police Charles C. Hooley and a mounted squad headed the parade.

Mrs. Kellogg Fairbank, grand marshal, dressed in a costume of white and yellow, followed, leading the ranks of women marching sixteen abreast. Her chief aides were Mrs. Joseph T. Bowen, Mrs. Mary H. Willmorth, Miss Mary McDowell, Miss Katherine H. Davis, Mrs. Julius Rosenwald and Mrs. Catherine Waugh McCulloch.

Members of the National Board of the American Women Suffrage Association were led by Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt, New York, President of the organization.

Miss Jane Adams of Hull House was unable to walk and rode in an automobile.

Although the parade was in charge of the National Woman Suffrage Association, the Congressional Union of Women Suffrage participated.

The resolutions asking for the Suffrage plank were carried at the head of the parade and into the Coliseum by four women, one from each of the corner States of the Union.

Attempts to prevent the insertion of a Suffrage plank in the Republican platform will be made by the National Association Opposed to Woman Suffrage, which has appointed a committee to protest against the introduction of the issue before the convention, according to Mrs. Arthur Dodge of New York.

BRITISH BLAME SPY FOR DESTRUCTION OF KITCHENER CRUISER

All Hope That War Minister Escaped in Boat Is Abandoned.

LONDON, June 7.—Hope that Earl Kitchener of Khartoum, British Secretary of State for War, might have escaped from the wrecked cruiser Hampshire on one of the four boats that were seen putting away from the doomed vessel after she struck a mine and was torpedoed by a submarine off the Orkney Islands and reached some lonely spot ashore was practically dispelled to-day by the announcement in the Daily Express that the body of Major Oswald Arthur Gerald Fitzgerald, Kitchener's military secretary, has been washed ashore.

There seems no doubt that Fitzgerald would have remained at the side of his chief, and if he lost his life it is practically sure Kitchener is dead.

No trace has been found of any of the four boats seen by observers ashore to put out from the doomed armored cruiser, and it is believed all were swamped by the high seas that were running. Not a man of Kitchener's party or of the 655 men on board the vessel survived.

A large flotilla of patrol boats and trawlers has been rushed to Orkney waters to search for the bodies. Many already have been recovered.

Whether the vessel was hit by a mine or torpedo will probably never be known, since she went down in water too deep for divers to operate. There is, however, a wild cry that German spies in London learned of Kitchener's secret trip to Russia and informed Berlin, which had U boats lying in wait for the Hampshire.

As if to give basis to this rumor, the British Government has issued a rigid order that no person will be permitted to land in the Orkney Islands in future without a military permit.

It is recalled that when the French cross-channel steamer Sussex was torpedoed by a submarine, the statement was semi-officially made that the Germans violated their pledges to America and almost brought about a diplomatic break only because of their information that Kitchener was on board the boat.

No successor to Lord Kitchener has been chosen, though the names of David Lloyd George, Minister of Munitions; the Earl of Derby, who took charge of Kitchener's recruiting plans, and Earl Milner are mentioned. However, it is more than likely that Gen. Sir William Robertson, Chief of Staff, will be chosen. Robertson, however, cannot serve unless he be raised to the Peerage so he can sit in the House of Lords, or secure his election to the House of Commons in a by-election.

hours, and it is believed by military men here that the veteran troops who had been withdrawn from the Russian front to take part in the Italian offensive have been hurried back toward the Rumanian border.

Vienna officially admits that the Austrians have been forced to withdraw before the Slavs from their lines north of Glin to "positions previously prepared a little more than three miles to the south." This means that the first effective impress of the Russian drive has been made at the tactically and politically vital point at the front under attack just north of the Bukovina-Rumanian border.

If the Russian successes are followed up, Czernowitz, the Bukovina capital, is once more seriously threatened, and an invasion of the Galician crownland would go far toward bringing Rumania into the war on the side of the allies.

The Russians seem determined to break through at any cost and are hurling masses of men upon the Austrian lines, Vienna declaring that of one Russian battalion of 1,000 men, 350 were killed in one fight.

Despite their successes, the Russians are permitting no details of their offensive to leak out, though a message from Vienna, by way of Amsterdam, declares the battle is increasing in fury all along the front, the Russians throwing wave after wave of men upon the Austrian lines in apparently an endless succession, giving the Teutonic defenders no respite whatever.

"The Russian troops are countless," the message says.

GERMAN LOSSES HEAVY IN ATTACK AT VAUX.

REPULSED BY FRENCH

PARIS, June 7.—The repulse of a powerful German attack on Fort Vaux, on the Verdun line, with heavy losses to the attackers, is announced in an official statement issued by the War Office to-day. Violent bombardment of the fort is still being carried on by the Germans.

The text of the statement follows: "To the west of Soncourt two German patrols, which were endeavoring to cross the river Aisne, were dispersed at a point near Fontenoy. The fire of our artillery destroyed several observatories of the enemy east of Noyvroux."

"In the Argonne district, at La Fille Morte, we caused the explosion with success of three mines.

"On the left bank of the river Meuse there has been artillery fighting in the sector of Hill No. 304 and in the sector of the Caumonts Wood.

"On the right bank of the river a strong German attack yesterday evening, at about 5 o'clock, upon Fort Vaux was broken by the fire of our machine guns. The enemy was driven back in disorder, leaving numerous dead on the field of battle. The German artillery responded with energy, and the bombardment of Fort Vaux and the region immediately surrounding it continues.

"In the Vosges there has been an intense bombardment of our first line positions at Hartmannswiller Kopf."

WOMEN AND A RING.

Mrs. Butler Says Mrs. Hoag Sold It and Kept the Money.

Mrs. Adeline Hoag, fifty years old, widow of Dr. William H. Hoag, a leading dental surgeon, who died eight years ago, was arrested to-day by Detective Thomas of the District Attorney's office, after indictment by the Grand Jury for grand larceny. Judge Crain in General Sessions committed Mrs. Hoag to the Tombs in default of $1,000 bail to await trial.

Mrs. Julia Butler of Plattsburgh, who brought about the indictment of Mrs. Hoag, told the Grand Jury that in January, 1915, Mrs. Hoag was introduced by her with a diamond solitaire ring valued at $500 to sell, and that she did dispose of it, keeping the money.

Since then Mrs. Butler has made repeated demands on Mrs. Hoag for the return of the ring or its cash equivalent, but with no success.

Mrs. Hoag denied she had stolen the ring. For several months she has been living at No. 11 West 57th Street. When her husband died he left an estate valued at more than half a million dollars. Most of the estate was left to the widow, and it is alleged by her friends and relatives that she dissipated all of it.
